MR. STANLEY'S SILENCE

Concerning His Last Expedition into Africa.

WHAT GAINS HAS SCIENCE MADE?

The Reading World Anxious to Learn of the Travels of the Intrepid Explorer —Desperate Battle with Riotous Striking Glass Blowers in Bohemia—Several Killed and Wounded—A Prince Who Seeks to Marry Natalie—Foreign Notes.

LONDON, Jan 30—People are asking, and it is inevitable that they should ask, why this silence concerning the expedition of Stanley still continues The explorer himself is understood to be in fairly good health and must know how impatient is the reading world to learn what gains science has made from the costly trip, to most of whom the narrative will be more fascinating than the most highly wrought novel Perhaps Mr Stanley is bound to submit everything intended for print to the King of the Belgians or Mr MacKinnon of the East African company, but there are plenty of disconnected incidents which would gratify reading people of all classes and would advertise the forthcoming work by stimulating public curiosity

Why Is Emin Silent?

Is Emin to be forever dumb? Is his pen forbidden him too? He has surely had provocation enough, and a denial of Stanley's assertions concerning him has been expected for some weeks Among the members of Stanley's party are several intelligent white men who do not seem to dare to give an account of their adventures unless to their nearest relatives or friends and with the proviso that such accounts shall be kept strictly private The foregoing portion of questions are being freely asked and they must shortly be answered. There is an appearance of mystery about the whole affair which is aggravating to the British public, and has aroused an antagonism which found voice in John Burns speech in the county council, although the labor leader's abuse of Stanley was much too indiscriminate

THEIR LAST CHANCE.

Perhaps very few people in this country are disposed to waste any sympathy on the Czar of Russia, but a general desire not to appear to other nations as billingsgate blackguards makes it necessary to call attention to the fact that there is certainly an unwritten international law which forbids the use of a foreign ruler's name to stigmatize such freebooters as Reed. When it comes to constitutional and parliamentary law, this fellow is an anarchist, and possibly it is for this reason that The Despatch some time since, clothed him in a red vest. Just now the republican party might render some assistance to the cause of law and order by pulling down his vest and clothing him in a secure suit of shackles. But it is probable that party will do nothing of the kind, for reasons that we shall see later.

When Reed was spoken of as speaker of the House there was a good deal of talk about the daring of the man: his admirers called it courage, but those who saw him more clearly called it a brutal indifference to the rights of others. The men who prated of courage can now employ their leisure moments in taking up with the other estimate. The probability of high-handed acts on the part of Reed was urged against his election. Now that he is speaker, he seems to take pleasure in showing how thorough a highwayman he can be. He not only ignores every right of the democrats, but he has also set himself up as dictator to the republicans. How well these like the part the dictator is playing, is hard to say. It will serve their immediate ends by enabling them to admit a few patriots who want democratic seats and to put through some legislation about which they are anxious. But how can they feel about the day of reckoning that is sure to come? Perhaps they never think of this, for it is the habit of the transgressors to let tomorrow take care of itself. But the morrow is very sure to come, and it promises to be well filled with republican grief.

Speaker Reed has decided that there is a quorum in the House when he chooses to "see" one. For more than a hundred years it has been a rule in the House of Representatives that one-fifth of its members might ask for a roll call of the ayes and nays. Such a call was always regarded as showing how many members were present, and how they voted. Those who did not answer to their names were regarded as not present for the purpose of doing business. This rule was one of the weapons in the hands of the minority, and we might say that it is to the honor of the country that only one man has appeared in a hundred years who was willing to take that weapon away. It is to the eternal disgrace of the republican party that it has allowed itself to make a hero and leader of this man. Perhaps every republican who is a representative at Washington knows full well that it is cowardly to disarm the minority in any deliberative assembly. It is probable that each one of them has said as much many times in his life. Perhaps nine-tenths of these republicans believe that the action of Reed is unconstitutional, and yet they will support him almost to a man.

Reed says that less than a quorum of republicans may pass a law, provided he can see enough democrats present to make up a quorum. The fact that these democrats take no part in the vote makes no difference to a man like Reed. Were there a dozen republicans in the House voting for a bill Reed would say that it had passed. If at the same time he were able to see 160 democrats who had not voted at all. This dictator might take it into his head to vote for a bill that is objectionable to every other member in the House. The republicans would not dare to vote against him. He would "see" a quorum in front of him and declare the bill passed. This is Reed's notion of parliamentary procedure, and a great big majority of overfed republicans are afraid to tell him that he is a rascally knave.

Reed tells us that a handful of republicans constitute a quorum to "do business" when there are democrats about. This was the idea on which Jesse James proceeded during his active career. He and a half dozen lieutenants would board a passenger train, and move to rob the three or four hundred people who might be aboard. Jesse would declare on the strength of his five or six votes that there was a quorum present to "do business." This declaration was always made because Jesse chose to "see" a quorum. And then the robbing would begin. Outlaw Reed is engaged in the same kind of work, and he doesn't even take the trouble to dodge the police.

But Reed undertakes to defend his course. He is dimly conscious that a defense is necessary, and perhaps we ought to be thankful for this concession. The republicans applaud the defense enthusiastically. They are very evidently delighted at the exhibition of nerve that would undertake such a task. During the performance Mr. Reed, having some appreciation of a proper bearing for the heavy villain of the play, looks serious.

He first tells the democrats that Gov. Hill did the same thing when he was presiding officer of the senate in New York state. He forgot to remark however that Hill has never been regarded as authority on parliamentary law, and that his action was very generally denounced by democrats. But it was a sight for bad men and devils to see Reed leaning on Hill. Then the speaker called attention to the fact that Randolph Tucker once suggested an amendment to the rules of the house which would allow just such action as he was about to take. He wasn't very clear in pointing out that the democrats were not cowardly enough to put the suggested amendment into the rules, although they had the numbers to do so. Neither was he very clear in showing how a defeated suggestion afforded any warrant for his dictatorial act.

But there was reason for Reed's stupidity. Give him a case with ball a side to it, and he is usually a bright man. He borrows brilliancy from his red vest. But when he has no peg on which to hang his hat he can do no better than clap it on his own head. When he was searching history for precedents why did he not take those best known to all? He might have mentioned the fact that Speaker Carlisle never undertook to "see" a quorum, and the same was true of a half hundred speakers before him. But there is also republican authority on the decent side of this question. Blaine ruled on the Force bill that the speaker had no power to count a quorum. Garfield once had something to say on this question. He asked: "How do we know but that the speaker may see 40 members (for his own purpose) more than there are in the house" and "who was to control the seeing of the speaker?"

But Reed himself had something to say in a former congress on this very question. He took a part in the debate on the Force bill. These were his words at that time: "The constitutional idea of a quorum is not the physical presence of a majority of the members of the house, but a majority of the members present and participating in the business of the house." When Reed was looking for a position he might have taken up with some of this. But he first declared himself dictator, and then began to look for authority.

Now why do the republicans support the speaker in this course? There is some legislation which they want, and that badly. They recognize that this is their last chance. There are land grants to be confirmed; the Blair educational bill must be put through; 17 democrats are to be unseated: and greatest of all and most desired is the federal election bill. If they can get these bills through the House, all will be clear sailing in the Senate and White House. When they are once on the statute books it will be a difficult matter to remove them. They hope to hold a majority in the Senate for several years, and they depend on this to prevent the repeal of any laws that may now be passed. They know that they have their last majority in the house, and so this is their time to make hay. The republicans know that Reed's ruling is an outrage, but it takes something of the kind to give them the laws that the barons demand, and so the slightest pretense of fair dealing is thrown to the winds, and the motto is "now or never." What has The Despatch to say about this work? We just want to see how generally republicans are infected with fear of the future.

THE Despatch need waste no time in discussing the defeat of the bill that was introduced to reimburse a lot of congressmen who gave up their salaries to Silcott at the point of a smile. Of course a lot of congressmen would like to vote for the bill if they were not afraid of their constituencies. Remove this fear and they would take the entire treasury. It is well to have a constituency that will punish all efforts to reimburse a congressman at some other person's expense. But why does The Despatch mildly deprecate all this? It ought not be necessary to worry about the impoverished condition of Capt. Rowell. He is now engaged in putting a lot of republicans in a way to draw salaries. They ought to whack up with him, at least they might invite him out to lunches until next pay day.

IF The Despatch wishes to stop that North Jasper street dog from stealing papers, just throw a Herald to him. There is no law against poisoning dogs that have become a public nuisance.

CONCENTRATION is the great key to success. The Republican would do well to let up on the newspaper business and apply all its talents to the opera house program.

THE Herald gets the subscribers it speaks of in the affidavit in the same way Reed gets a quorum. It "sees" them.

A Card.

I wish to call the especial attention of all lovers of refined drama and grand English opera to the two superior companies offered for next Monday and Tuesday evenings at the Grand Opera House.

On Monday evening, Feb. 3, Mr. A. M. Palmer's Madison Square Theatre Company will appear in the great Madison Square Theatre success, "Jim, the Penman," Mr. Joseph Whiting (the original) as Jim the Penman, and a company of superior merit. This is Mr. Palmer's own company and the only one producing this great play.

For Tuesday evening, Feb. 4, I take pleasure in announcing positively the largest and most expensive English opera company now traveling in America, the famous Bostonians. The company numbers 65, and contains more first-class artists than any other opera company that ever visited Decatur, including such artists as Marie Stone, Jessie Bartlett Davis, Juliette Corden, Tom Carl, H. C. Barnabee, W. H. McDonald, George Frothingham, and a host of others. Grand chorus of 30 voices and an orchestra of 13 pieces.

In order to secure these excellent companies I have guaranteed them full houses in Decatur, and I hope all lovers of first-class entertainments will make it a point to be present on these particular occasions, if not other.

Truly yours,
F. W. HAINES.

The Bostonians.

On Tuesday next, Feb. 4th, the fine company called "The Bostonians" (for years known as the Boston Ideals, and containing all the original members of that company), will make its first appearance at the Grand Opera House. One of the great successes of the company has always been Suppe's grand opera "Fanitinitza," and that will be given here by special request. The theater will be packed on the occasion.

Police Items.

The case against J. C. Houck, for using profane language, was continued yesterday by Justice Curtis until Feb. 7.

Squire Curtis issued a warrant yesterday for Jesse Coventry for horse stealing. He was to have had a preliminary examination, but the witnesses could not be gotten together.

Quotation Social.

The young ladies of the Y. W. C. T. U. will give a quotation social at the W. C. T. U. rooms this evening. There will be a musical and literary program and magic lantern exhibition. Refreshments will be served during the evening. All are invited. No admission fee.

INDIAN REVENGE.

"Oh, I do dote so on Indians!"

So said a musical little voice, as Miss Margery Tracy looked over a book of beautiful engravings.

"So what?" exclaimed a silvery headed old man who sat in a easy chair by the winter's fire.

"Dote on Indians, dear grandpa: they look so noble in their richly colored robes, their furs and their feathers."

"Noble! the blood thirsty rebels!" said the old man, holding out one arm as he spoke and striking it with the other, "that and this and every part of my body, in fact, is scared by those infernal dogs. Why, look here, child," and he drew his white locks from his ample forehead, "see the marks of their scalping knives; they left me for dead once, and came near having these hairs hanging to their girdles."

"Why, grandpa!" exclaimed Margery, drawing up to the old man, "is it possible that great white mark was made by an Indian brave?"

"An Indian coward!" cried the veteran contemptuously. "Talk about their bravery, the stubborn, inborn devils, they don't know what it means. The courage of a beast is all they have. My patience, girl, if you had seen as much of the Indians as I have, you'd never take these creature's of a painter's imagination to be the simon pure savage. No, no, there's a difference. My child, I'll tell you a story that will cure you of doting on Indians. When I was a young man I had many a bout with the 'children of the forest,' as your poets call them. Now there was never any poetry in your old grandfather, Maggie, little one. I never could see anything beautiful in their hideous painted faces, and to tell the truth, they killed my only brother, and I hate the whole race.

"We had a long spell of peace, and had become tired of our cabins upon Boone's station. It was too easy a life for young fellows, simply gunning, fishing, sleeping and eating. We weren't like the moustachioed gentry of the present day—even like the one who came to see you last night, little child, though he is a better specimen than some. We couldn't dress up in those days and take little bits of paper in our hands and go call upon the pretty ladies and show off our teeth and our broadcloth the best part of the day. We were rough men in our hunting frocks, who thought a goodsized deer none to heavy to throw over our shoulders after we had run him down, and to whom other dears were as fabulous as myths.

"But, as I tell you, we—there were four of us—had become tired of idleness, and wanted another bout with the Indians. So, knowing that a party had stolen some horses, and that they had taken their way to Chillicothe, we set out after them to try and regain the booty they had taken. We reached Chillicothe a few days afterward, and fell in with a drove of horses feeding in the rich prairie. Of these we secured six and started on our return. Before we reached the Ohio a storm came up. The heavens grew black with clouds and the wind blew a perfect hurricane. What to do with the horses we could hardly tell. They had become unmanageable and were difficult to control. The river was so swollen—its waves lashed into fury—that we dared not venture to cross, and we were fearful of being pursued. It was nearing evening, and we could just find our way back to the hills, where, after hobbling our animals, we remained during the night. It was an awful night. The rain poured in torrents, the lightning blazed from point to point, and the thunder seemed to crash and break against the sides of the hills. We were all exposed to the fury of the tempest. In the morning our clothes were wet and we had only saved our powder by sleeping on it. The wind, however, had subsided, and we tried again to get our horses over to the other side—the creatures resisted every attempt, and we were driven to the alternative of losing the horses. Of course we chose the latter, and selecting each of us one of the best, we made for the falls.

"There was a handsome young fellow with us, a Kentuckian by birth, who thought we had scarcely had adventure enough, so he proposed to me to let the rest go on, while he and I captured two splendid bays. We turned back accordingly, and came the first thing on a trail of revengeful Indians, who had undoubtedly been seeking us from the first. My dear child, if you had seen them as they really were, their faces streaked with black and yellow, their untanned blankets, rough leggins and demoniac faces, you never would have doted upon them. Willis, the Kentuckian, was some ways ahead of me, and by some unsuccessful maneuver fell immediately into their hands. It was a dreadful sight to see them each drive with his heavy club at the head of the poor fellow. He fell instantly, and they scalped him, throwing the fresh, bleeding skin over their weapons and waving it in my sight.

"I was on a splendid horse. They, too, were mounted and had fleet animals, so they pursued me at the top of their speed. For a time I escaped, only to fall into their barbarous hands, however. Deceived by a voice I thought familiar, and the pronunciation of a word in English, I followed a trail, and lured on by the supposition that I was on the track of friends from whom we had been separated, and who might have come back to the rescue, I went cautiously forward, but suddenly found myself among a party of Indians, who were so engaged that, I suppose, if I had had presence of mind, I might have escaped, for I think they did not see me.

"However, thinking the boldest course the best, I immediately fired at the foremost, and in another moment they were after me like a pack of hounds. I took advantage of some fallen timber, I tried to dodge them, and to hide among the underbrush, but their cunning defeated my purposes. They divided into two parties, and rode along on either side of the timber, beating it up, driving me out at the opposite end, where stood an enormous savage with a lifted tomahawk. Just as he was about to strike me to the earth, however, another Indian equally powerful lifted me as if I had been a feather out of the way of the descending tomahawk. I was a prisoner, and obliged to make the best of it. You may imagine what that best was."

"Oh, grandfather!" cried Margery, "how did you feel?"

"How did I feel? Fush, how could you feel with ten jabbering savages about you, each one looking as if he could eat you without pepper or salt?"

"It must have been a trying moment," said Margery.

"Not half as trying as what followed," said the old man, shaking his white locks. "They muttered their outlandish gibberish in my face, making up hideous mouths, expressive of their intense disgust of me and my race. They shook the scalp of poor Willis before my very eyes, and I don't doubt wanted to serve mine in the same way. Then leaving me helplessly tied, they went out to catch the horses. The difficulty with which this feat was accomplished made them wilder than ever, in their rage against me. I saw them deliberate, and knew by their gestures they were reserving me for some fearful doom. At last a tall Indian went without the circle and succeeded in leading in one of the horses, a fiery, vicious animal that had given me great trouble, and who, in his looks and movements seemed almost demoniac. Close to me they led him. I felt his hot breath against my face, and more than once his hoof seemed about to crush my foot to atoms. I thought that in some way they intended my death by that monstrous gray horse, and so they did, but I had not calculated for the extreme cruelty of which they are capable. What was my horror when I found that they were going to bind me to the animal, torture him and set him free."

"Oh, grandfather! you are a second Mazeppa," cried Margery, listening meanwhile with intense interest.

"A distinction for which I paid cruelly," said the old man, folding his arms and gazing into the fire.

"They lifted me upon the horse, he all the while rearing, backing, snorting, and seating me with my face toward the tail, they tied my feet under him. This made them great trouble, for the horse was at times unmanageable, but for every annoyance he gave them they paid me in blows, or sought wounds with their knives. They then drew a rope about my arms, drawing and lashing me back on the animal, another round my neck, tying that to the neck of the horse, in an wheeled it was carried to his full, making it use the purpose of a cropper. In this way they secured me to the frantic beast, and as the whole demons incarnate danced yelling around me, tearing about me, testing the cords and getting in the anticipated sufferings that were to overtake me, and with shouts that echoed like thunder, turned him loose. The poor animal and the poor wicked spirit within dashed into the darkness of the woods. The horse, feeling his unusual burden and trying to get rid of it, took its way among the tangled undergrowth, leaping at every step, throwing me against projecting branches, roaring, plunging, utterly the wildest cries of terror. I longed and prayed for death, I raved and sent up cries of anguish which were Sometimes I had insensible and then a shocking blow would bring me to agonizing consciousness. I knew that death would come at last, but oh, the awful agony, the suffering that permeated every bone, nerve, sinew I can describe nothing like it. It is terrible to recall, too frightful to portray."

The old man shook as he left this hard before his eyes as if to shut out a fearful spectacle. The young girl shuddered, too, and tenderly took his free hand in her own.

"Well, the horse soon got tired of his character. What prevented him from rushing over and crushing me, heaven only knows, after a run, the next but one after my capture, the animal emerged into a broad prairie. I was dying with hunger, sore in every inch of my body, longing only that death might put an end to my sufferings. I was only partly conscious—just alive, and that was all. I seemed to know that my breath was almost gone, and wished to make no effort to retain it. Then there came a long silence—a great blank—and how many hours after I do not know, but I found myself lying on a mad bed in a log hut, and an angel faced girl bending over me.

"He has opened his eyes, mother," were the first words I heard, and then all was blank again. It seems the sagacity of the horse had led him to the first house after he had become thoroughly subdued. It proved to be the habitation of an American family. They treated me with the greatest care, the tenderest consideration. It was months before I was well and completely cured of a longing to exterminate the Indians. I preferred after that a home of my own, and the blooming Margaret for my wife, who had taken such care of me."

"So dearest grandmother was that Margaret?" said Margery.

"No, darling," and the veteran took a tenderer tone, "my first Margaret sleeps in the grave made out in the wild prairies. She only lived a year."—Mary A. Dennison in Chicago Ledger.

Nearly Killed by a Savage Boar.

Mr. Sanford Furbish, of Webster, is the owner of a 2 year old boar which has grown to enormous size and has always been noted for his savage propensities. His tushes are said to be two and one-half inches in length.

Last Thursday Mr. Furbish attempted to drive him home from one of his neighbor's. But the boar declined to be driven, and showed fight. Pitchforks were brought into requisition to overcome his obstinacy, and he was got nearly to his quarters on the barn before he did any damage.

In crossing a miry place in the road he made an attack on his owner, and threw him four or five feet into the air and against a fence.

This so disabled Mr. Furbish that he fell on the ground, and the enraged animal had it all his own way until help came and got Mr Furbish out of his way and into an ox cart near by.

The bear then mounted the cart and was determined to make an end of his work in mutilating the poor man, and it was with difficulty that he could be kept out of the cart. A brother of Mr. Furbish then got a basket of apples and succeeded in luring him away and into his pen, where he was secured.

Dr. Sleeper was summoned to attend the injured man, and found one rib broken and a wound large enough to admit a finger between two ribs, extending clear into the lung.

This made it impossible for him to breathe through one lung on account of air entering through the wound. His condition is considered critical.—Lewiston Journal.

Four Years on Crutches.

For fifteen years I was afflicted with rheumatism, four years of which I was compelled to go on crutches. Words are inadequate to express the suffering I endured during that time. During those fifteen years of existence (it was not living), I tried every known remedy without receiving any benefit. I finally began on Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), which from the first gave me relief, and today I am enjoying the best of health, and am a well man. I candidly believe that S. S. S. is the best blood purifier on the market today.

The Sewer Commissioners

Considerable midnight electricity has been consumed the last few nights by commissioners appointed by the county court to make an estimate of the benefits conferred on property owners by the proposed sewers. All the commissioners have been working hard both day and night since their appointment. Last night some of them were busy at the clerk's office all night. They were trying to get their report ready to return to the court to-day, as this is the last day. It was thought they would be successful in doing that, and in that case the work will be done this summer.

The commissioners have decided that the city would be benefited about one-fourth the cost of the whole improvement, and that much has been assessed to it.

A BUSINESS MEETING.

BUSINESS MEN OF DECATUR AT WORK

A Good Attendance in Response to the Mayor's Call—The Solid Men of the City—Propositions Stated—A Committee Appointed—Be Ready With Your Subscriptions.

The meeting held in the council room last night in response to the mayor's call, showed that a general interest has been awakened in the matter of doing something to increase the business of Decatur. Besides the presence of the leading bankers, merchants and manufacturers of the city, which of itself means something, there was an air of confidence and determination that means much more. At least a vigorous effort will be made to accomplish something for the city's betterment.

Among those present were James Millikin, L. Burrows, W. F. Busher, H. Shlaudeman, C. A. Ewing, Thereon Powers, K H Roby, F. Mattes, J. M. Clokey, D. A. Maffit, Theo. Nelson, Jesse and F. A. Lefforgee, K Harwood, O. E. Curtis, P. Loeb, G R Steele, D C Shockley, B. Bradley, C. W. Battles, John A. Brown, W. H Davis, F. A. Brown, J. L. Autrim, H Scanlan, B Hamsher, O Z Greene, T. T Roberts, William Bowers, S. R. Gher, B O. McReynolds, Cass Chenoweth, W. H. Starr, Cy Imboden, D. C Moffett, George Lyon, William Traver and Ed L. Martin.

J M. Clokey called the meeting to order.

On motion of John A. Brown, C A. Ewing was made chairman. He took the chair, and after a few words, asked that a secretary be named. J. M. Clokey suggested Theodore Nelson, and he was chosen.

On the request of the chairman, Mr. Clokey stated the object of the meeting The mayor and the speaker had had a great many chats over the matters to be considered. The mayor has been of the opinion that the time had come for decisive and progressive action. The mayor has had a progressive administration, one that has seen most marked and substantial improvement in the city.

As his hearers were aware, the city has become widely known as a growing town, that promises many opportunities for investment. He knew of many capitalists who wanted to come here

We must take no backward steps, and now is the time to take definite action to open the door to the many enterprises that are now asking admission.

As secretary of the board of trade, he had received communications from many firms who wanted to locate here. Some had to be dropped on account of lack of interest on the part of some of our citizens, but he had never known a time when so there were so many as there are now ready to come here, if satisfactory inducements are offered them.

He had given the matter some thought and found our statistics made a very encouraging showing.

The school statistics and registered vote indicates a population of 20,000 The new directory indicates an increase of over 4,000 in the last four years. We can safely claim that we have 20 000 inhabitants.

There are undoubtedly 16 business rooms to be erected here this summer. There are no vacant rooms now, but something must be done to see that they do not fail to find tenants

The board of trade has now propositions from many enterprises that want to locate here. One is from a shoe factory, the proprietors of which have had 20 years experience It has a large trade and Decatur is in the center of it. It will take $11,000 from Decatur to get it The information of McClokey, confirmed by John A. Brown and George W. Powers was that eastern towns would pay $50,000 for such a factory as we are now offered for $11,000

Investigation by Decatur citizens had shown that the business was much better than the proprietors represented it The investigation also showed that there are 75 towns after the enterprise, all anxious to do get it, but Decatur is the only one to which they have made a written proposition.

Another factory that in six months will employ 50 skilled mechanics and in a year 100, will come for $25 00

Another proposition has been received from a stove factory. It has been in operation three years now and has paid a dividend of 10 per cent They have bad shipping facilities now, and want to get a better place. They offer to come here if the citizens will take $15,000 stock. They will themselves hold $15,000 stock. It is not a dead business, but a solid enterprise on a firm foundation

Continuing, Mr. Clokey spoke of the money that had been put in the street railways the last year and also referred to what has more recently been done in the way of selling 5,000,000 brick to be delivered this summer That is simply an indication of what can be done when we get foreign capitalists to inspect some of our advantages.

THE MAYOR

was next called on by the chairman He said the speaker before him had stated fully the object of the meeting, and left nothing for him to say.

Mr. Clokey suggested that as he had recently been in the east, might have something to say. That gentleman spoke of what he had said in Boston about our immense coal business. About shoe factories he said they liked to congregate together, because few factories used all the leather, and that which a factory did not use could be readily turned over to another. While there he saw men who freely offered $50,000 for such a factory as we are promised.

JOHN A. BROWN

There was one thing noticeable about shoe factories. Where one prospered, others came in. His native town of Brockton had been built up that way. He was sure it would be the same here if the one now talked of was secured and it was successful. Such factories would give employment to every body. One factory there had 150 boys from 8 to 14 years, who worked at all hours, out of school, and at night, and made from $10 to $15 a week.

Many towns in the east are trying to do something to improve their business. Lewiston people organized a stock company with a capital of $500,000, that had done much to increase the city's business. One friend of the speaker's had authorized him to invest $500,000 in any successful business now here that wanted to sell out, but he had found none such.

Mr. Clokey moved that a committee of five be appointed to secure the funds necessary to secure the shoe factory and the $2,500 factory.

James Millikin suggested that they take one thing at a time, say the shoe factory. We know our own people are very liberal, until it comes time to pay the money. When the $11,000 for the shoe factory is raised it would be time to go for the other

Mr. Clokey accepted the suggestion When the other proposition was made he and three others had promised on behalf of the town that the $2,500 would be raised They were ready yet to hold to that promise.

O E. Curtis, W. T. Wells and George W. Powers, were named on the committee. The name of D. A. Maffit was suggested, but he asked to be excused because he was too busy putting up ice. L. Burrows was the fifth member of the committee. The mayor was added as chairman.

MONEY TALKS.

Peter Loeb said he thought right now would be a good time to start this thing, this was the time for action, and he would head the subscription list with $100 Afterwards Mr. Loeb said he would be one of 50 to guarantee the sum of $11,000. Mr Millikin said he would be No. 2. Mr. Clokey said he would be No. 3 The mayor, Morehouse Wells & Co., and the Coffin company followed. Then Mr. Millikin said put down the National Bank, Peddecord, Burrows & Co, and John A Brown. B. O. McReynolds put down the Decatur Coal company. Mr. Burrows put down the Union Iron Works. Mr. Millikin put down the Furniture factory. Mr. Burrows put down the Hatfield Milling company. That ended that.

The mayor said he would be one of 50 to guarantee this sum, but if that plan could not be made successful, he would be one of 11 to get this factory; and when the time came the furniture factory would not be found wanting.

After some discussion it was concluded the time for the soliciting committee to do its work was too short. The proposition must be accepted by the 2d of February. The first committee was therefore increased by adding the names of B. Z. Taylor, B. O. McReynolds, John A. Brown, Theo Nelson, Charles Powers and T. T. Roberts The last named gentleman volunteered when two or three declined.

T. T. Roberts moved that the subscriptions begin at once, and continue Friday night, when an adjourned meeting would be held. The motion carried and subscriptions started thus:

The meeting then adjourned to meet again to night. The soliciting committee met afterwards and divided the city into three districts, as follows All south of Main street in one, all west of Water and North of Main in another, and all east of Water and north of Main in a third. Four members of the committee will go to work in each district to-day and raise the money.

The business men should be ready for them when they come. The time is short, and any action must be prompt. A telegram accepting this proposition should be sent tomorrow morning. There is but little time to do the work. It must be borne in mind that if Decatur is to get anything, it must be by the aid of her citizens, and as all will get the benefit, it is but fair that all should take a hand in the work

A Lecture to Bookkeepers

President G W Brown had a pleasant surprise last night at the business college He had announced a lecture to retail bookkeepers and prepared himself to talk to experts on that subject. When the time came, however, the large hall in the college was filled with a bright looking company of ladies and gentlemen, who clearly were not all bookkeepers, because there are not so many in the city as were in that room. However, the president, though doubtful of how much he could make plain to them, went to work and talked for an hour and a half about debits and credits, balances and entries, until his audience had a fair knowledge of bookkeeping, though many of them had never given it a moment's thought before. It turned out to be a very interesting evening to both speaker and listeners.

Taylorville Democrat.

Born to Bell Elgan, undergoing 14 years imprisonment in the Joliet penitentiary for the murder of Sang Wo, the Pana Chinee laundryman, a bouncing daughter was born on the 1st of January This will be a surprise to many, although it ought not to be, for years ago she cast aside the "lilies and langors of virtue for the roses and raptures of vice."

Has Seen Its Best Days.

Hoyt's Rag Baby has passed the period of its charming infancy and it no longer pleases. The Baby has evidently reached the awkward age, when it becomes a public nuisance instead of a universal pet. It should be given a dose of soothing syrup and sent to the nursery. There was a good sized audience at the Grand last evening, but it was evident they were there from the force of habit.

Might Move Back.

A Wabash official speaking about a new depot said. "It is certain that if the Wabash had had adequate depot facilities here the division freight office would not have been moved, and perhaps other offices would be here now. If a new depot was built, in which the Wabash could have rooms to suit it, the feasibility of moving the freight office back here would be considered strongly. It was moved first as a matter of economy."

Got His Brick.

H. L. Talbot, the Detroit contractor, made a contract yesterday with H. M Whitmer for a large amount of paving brick. Altogether he has now bought 3,500,000 brick the amount he came from Detroit to get. His orders will keep Decatur yards very busy this summer.

INDICTMENTS QUASHED.

An Interesting Time in the Circuit Court for Several People.

About the most interesting half day of this term of circuit court was yesterday afternoon, when the whisky cases were called. The motions outlined in yesterday's Review were made by the defendants' attorneys, Messrs. Finn and Hutchinson They alleged that besides being illegally organized and in session when court had adjourned, the grand jury had returned indictments that were imperfect, and not explicit For instance, an indictment would say the accused "sold liquor to so and so, who was an habitual drunkard" The fact that he was an habitual drunkard when the liquor was sold was not asserted. The words "then and there," or others equivalent to them, should have been inserted.

The court sustained the last point, and the way indictments were knocked out was extremely unpleasant to States Attorney Mills, who saw several $5 going out of sight and a great deal of work taking their place if he wants to have new indictments found. That he can do, if the present grand jury, or another one thinks the evidence sufficient, but the work will all have to be gone over again

Indictments for selling liquor to minors or inebriates against the men whose names follow were quashed Frank W Myer, Frank Johnson, H. W. An I. O. O. F. Temple.

It is now almost definitely decided that an I. O. O. F. temple will be built this summer. The joint committee appointed by the order has concluded to recommend the undertaking of the project. The site has not yet been selected, nor in fact has any conclusion been come to about methods or details It is even possible that a building already built, which could be easily remodeled, will be bought. At any rate the order is going to have a home of its own.

A ROMANCE OF RICHES.

The Town of Rouseville, Where an Acre Was Worth $2,000,000.

This is the oldest town in the Pennsylvania oil regions having been the first town to spring into life under the wonderful stimulus of the oil excitement It is located on Oil creek, two and a half miles above Oil City, and it was here that the third well was drilled for oil and on the McElhinny farm, a short distance above Rouseville, the first real "spouter" was struck This was the famous "Pioneer No 1" which flowed a stream of oil over the top of the derrick, high above the tallest trees in the neighborhood and set all the great rush of people into this wonderful region This was once a great town to rival with booming cities scores of books will tell the commercial facilities of its city Imagine near to Oil City and Petroleum Center its population never got above 10000 if it reached that figure But it was one of the most active cities in the belt of oil It was surrounded on all of the wonderful flowing wells for miles and days The Widow McClintock farm was held under the possession of Johnny Steel afterwards known to the world as "Coal Oil Johnny," a within sight of this town Like all other oil towns, Rouseville has been swept by the chamber of flames and there is but little of the old town left What is left of it is a ramshackle old relic, in which there is not little to suggest the bustle and excitement and the fortunes lost and won in former days Coal Oil Johnny is by no means the only man who found success fortune within sight of this quiet little town The most great oil flow was here when the Rouse well was burned and Harry Rouse after whom the town was named was burned to death, along with 18 others in the fire. The story of this tragedy has been told in these columns and need not be repeated It was the most appalling thing in the history of oil fires and, being the first great flow of oil struck in the valley, it left a lasting impression Here is the spot of the first well drilled by Col Drake who drilled the first well that struck oil in paying quantities The monument to the memory of the men who were the first to perform the feat points to the spot where Col Drake who drilled the first well has room enough to stand and the citizens of Rouseville do not believe that other room will ever be required

Half a mile from Rouseville, on the east of the plateau is Petroleum Center, which has been situated over a lake of oil Many of the big wells were struck within the limits of the town, and great gushers sent amidst the town on every side Not only was the Oil creek flats literally put in but Cherry run which empties into Oil creek at this point produced as wells and oil in richness to the Oil creek wells Some of the largest of these were near Rouseville and it can be said that the wells in the vicinity have yet enough oil to have sent many fortunes to the owners Up Cherry run the oil excitement was at its height when the Rouse well was struck Here the
